Porcelain Tub Restorations in Bowie, Maryland recently announced a new coating technology using a high-powered ultraviolet lamp to instantly cure coating that can withstand a pot of boiling water without suffering any damage. Used in conjunction with their Multi-Stone line, it produces a faux-stone look to any counter top or even ceramic floor tile surface without any downtime.

Paul Burns, owner of Porcelain Tub Restorations, recently had this to say about the new service: "This is an amazing instant cure technology for refinishing bathroom or kitchen countertops and ceramic floor tiles. It will dramatically change the look of a room, and we're excited to be offering the service to our customers."

Burns goes on to say that the new coating technology is perfect for worn out, damaged, and outdated materials such as Formica, Corian, and ceramic, and can dramatically change the look of a room. The company can provide refinishing for countertops and backsplashes for kitchens as well as various bathroom and flooring options.

The coating comes in a variety of finishes. "We offer our customers so many choices, from solid colors to an array of Faux stone in high gloss to satin finishes," says Burns.

Burns has created a triple adhesion technology that utilizes polyester instead of epoxy or polyurethane coatings, along with a water repelling additive. This helps to keep countertops, tubs, and tiles clean and provides longer durability. The company states that it took nearly a year to get the process down, and now they can instantly transform a kitchen or bathroom. Countertops can be used immediately after exposure to the UV lamp, and an entire kitchen full of counters can be completed in just one day.

Paul Burns is a nationally recognized remodeler, with features on major television networks and newspapers.
