

4 Wardrobe Reveals Three Essential Elements In Building Fitted Wardrobes In London

September 03, 2015

September 03, 2015 -
4 Wardrobe, a wardrobe business in London, UK, has recently released a blog post that highlights the three essential things people need to know if they intend to build their own fitted wardrobes within their walk-in closets. While it is advisable to leave this task to the professionals, 4 Wardrobe is aware that some people would like to try building such a wardrobe themselves. As such, they hope that the information contained in the blog will help them to be successful in that enterprise.

"We are specialists in helping people to design and build their fitted wardrobes in London," says Michael Frick from 4 Wardrobe. "However, we understand that people often try to save money by doing as much as possible themselves. The information we have provided is to make sure that people are able to do so as best as possible and that they keep themselves safe too. Of course, the ideal way would be to hire an experienced contractor to build the wardrobe."

The recently released blog post provides three main tips. Basically, these have to do with lighting, ventilation, and the need to take proper measurements. These are three elements that DIY fitted wardrobes UK builders often get wrong, which is what 4 Wardrobe is trying to address.

"All too often, we come to people's homes where someone has tried to build their own wardrobe and the project is a complete failure," adds Michael Frick. "They don't think of lighting and can't see what's in the wardrobe. They forget about ventilation and end up having smelly clothes. Or, worst of all, they take their measurements wrong and end up with wardrobes that are an inch too small here and there. All of these can be avoided by hiring a professional, but those who follow the tips in our recent blog post will also be more likely to be successful in their endeavors."

Fitted wardrobes are very popular in the UK, where properties often have awkward spaces such as alcoves and chimneys. They are also known to add significant value to a property. However, this is only true if the wardrobes are built properly.
