

San Diego Attorney Discusses Who Pays for Personal Injury Settlements in New Blog

December 08, 2017

December 08, 2017 -
San Diego, California - Brett Geruntino, Esq. of Acclaim Law Group recently posted a blog on his site explaining where the money comes from during a settlement. He explains that some clients hesitate to file against the city or an individual because they are worried about the fiscal damage it could cause. He hopes his blog will raise awareness among his clients and help them make an informed decision.

In his blog at www.acclaimlaw.com, Mr. Geruntino explains that much of the money, if not all, comes from insurance companies and the person or entity held accountable for the damages is rarely affected. According to the attorney, many clients have not known that to be the case. He hopes that readers of his new post will discover exactly where the money comes from in various settlements.

Mr. Geruntino says he frequently uses his blog to cover topics, such as who pays for settlements, that he feels are important to prospective clients and the public in general and hopes that by informing the public he will eventually have clients who are more aware of what they need and what to expect when they come to his office.
