

Swansea Composite Decking Company Expands Display

October 24, 2018

D.G. Heath, a Swansea, South Wales-based timber products seller specializing in decking and flooring for both inside and outside of the house, is proud to announce the recent expansion of their display area to include even more products they have on offer. Representatives from the company say that the new expansion is an even better way for both customers and tradesmen to come in and see what kinds of decking and balustrade options are available for any home project.

"We're very excited about this expansion of our display area," Dean Heath from D.G. Heath says. "We've always felt that coming in and seeing for yourself what your deck or floor will look like is the best way to help make the decision. Being able to display even more products is great for our customers, and for tradesmen looking for materials for their next project."

Outdoor decking can come in different types of wood, such as hardwood and redwood decking, or PVC styles, such as granite or walnut. But one of the most popular types of decking is composite decking, which is typically made with an almost equal mix of recycled plastic and recycled wood fibers.

The positives of composite decking are many, Dean says. One of the biggest is that composite decking is impervious to rotting and is durable. "With the changing weather we have in South Wales, composite decking is perfect for homeowners," he says. "Wood decks tend to need sanding, sealing, and staining, not to mention regular plank replacement. It will last you a long time with very little maintenance."

Dean also notes that composite decking is resistant to mold and insects and won't stain or fade after installation. "It's really easy to clean," Health states. "All you have to do is spray it down with a hose with a little of the recommended cleaner on a regular basis and it will keep for a long time. There is no worrying about any warping or twisting of the deck, and best of all, no splinters."

Another perk of composite decking for contractors is that it is easier to install than traditional decks. Dean says, "The installation of a composite deck uses a lot of the same tools as a traditional deck, but there are a number of grooves on the sides with hidden fasteners. The fasteners help create a smooth surface and the end result doesn't show any screws."

DG Heath also offers a number of products for inside the home as well as outside. Their doors section includes latches, locks, handles, and ball bearings, as well as doors in several different colors, woods, finishes, and designs. Their staircase section includes brackets, handrails, spindles, newels and newel caps. They offer wall and insulation products that can be tailored to a specific project, and various types of paneling for bathrooms.

The Swansea business is also a verified underfloor heating supplier. They have experience in giving a free quotation and walking customers through the costs associated with installing a heating system under the floor of the home. They are an approved installer of Warmup heating systems and can typically install a system within hours for most projects, without having to raise the floor.

The company has been supplying flooring products for over 20 years in the Swansea area, offering a number of options and accessories including laminate flooring, vinyl flooring, hardwood, underlay, finishing trims, adhesives and levelers, and finishing products and maintenance products.

For over 30 years, family-run DG Heath has been supplying Swansea and the surrounding areas with high quality products including flooring, fencing, decking, doors, garden buildings, sheet materials like plywood, and general timber. Their indoor and outdoor displays are built to show a wide array of finished installations. The company also cuts any kind of timber measured and cut to size.

The company's commitment to their customers has generated a number of positive reviews from their customers. Dave E. has this to say about DG Heath's services: "I have been using DG Heath to supply materials for my building, home renovation and garden landscaping projects for many years. It is my first point of contact for advice on product suitability. Always great advice, service, pricing and delivery. I expect to be using them for a lot more work in the future too. Always a pleasure to deal with."
