

Akesis Life Announces Launch Of An Integrative Oncology Center Website

October 22, 2018

Akesis Life in Wattana, Bangkok, Thailand, has announced the launch of a new website for their integrative cancer treatment center in Bangkok. The clinic includes the medical team of Dr. Thomas Lodi and Dr. Chatchai Sribundit, world-renowned physicians in the field of integrative oncology.

Luke Watts, a representative for the clinic says, "We are pleased to announce the new website and the fact that these two doctors have come together to create a cancer treatment center that is the first of its kind."

Watts explains that the world-renowned medical team is made up of Thomas Lodi, M.D., MD(H), CNS and Chatchai Sribundit, M.D. Dr. Lodi is a believer in integrative medicine and the positive effects that it has shown to have on cancer. He has spent years educating doctors all over the world about his philosophy. Dr. Lodi is a member of a number of professional medical societies including the American College for the Advancement in Medicine, American Society of Clinical Oncology and the Cancer Control Society both in Japan and in the United States, among others. His licenses and certifications over the years include Fellow of Integrative Cancer Therapies, Instructor of Insulin Potentiation Therapy, Allopathic Medical Doctor in the State of New York, and a seat on the American Board of Chelation Therapy. A full list of Dr. Lodi's certifications and specialties can be seen on the new website.

Dr. Chatchai Sribundit is the founder of Akesis Life. Dr. Sribundit's education, training, and support from the community are regarded worldwide. Dr. Sribundit has traveled over the past 20 years to bring integrative cancer treatments to Thailand, his primary concern being the well being of his patients through care and kindness. Dr. Sribundit's professional society memberships include the American Board of Anti Aging and Regenerative Medicine, Integrative Cancer Therapy, a Certificate of Organotherapy and Autohaemotherapy in Germany, and a Certificate in Acupuncture and TCM from Shanghai University, among several others. His training and certifications include hands-on training in Oxidation Therapy and Prolozone in San Francisco, Certified Prolotherapy Physician from the University of Wisconsin, Fellow of Integrative Cancer Therapy, Diplomat on the American Board of Anti Aging and Regenerative Medicine, and several others.

"Many people, particularly cancer patients, are unaware of integrated therapy," says Watts.

"Integrated therapy is a unique approach to treating cancer that has proven to be quite effective."

Watts says that conscious living is important, both for the warding off of diseases and for general health. The integrated therapy approach used by Akesis Life includes teaching the individual how to fight off cancer using natural sources. He states that the side effects of conventional cancer treatments can be nearly as bad as the disease itself and that the patient must learn how to naturally heal. Integrative therapy programs typically include targeting and eliminating cancer cells while causing no harm to the patient. It involves rebalancing and enhancing the immune system and learning how to stop making cancer. Watts says that the program is not based simply on theory but on real life experiences that have come from studies involving people with cancer and using natural approaches to treating that cancer.

Statistics show that more than 150 people every hour are diagnosed with cancer and more than 1,500 of those diagnosed with the disease die every day. Traditional cancer treatments involve medicines and therapies that can cause more damage than the disease. Chemotherapy and radiation make the patient ill and can cost them their independence and dignity. Watts says that integrative therapy can change this.

Integrative therapy works on the premise that cancer is an effort of the body to reestablish balance and that certain chemicals produced by tumors are the same chemicals found in some healing wounds. They are similar because they both stimulate tissue growth and new blood vessels. Watts says that healing is a natural process and that the body has the potential for regeneration and procreation on its own when treated properly. He states that cancer arises from a number of factors and requires various solutions that include medical therapy, lifestyle, and nutrition changes and focus on the psychological, social, emotional and spiritual issues that are important to each patient. He points out that while conventional therapies focus only on the disease itself, integrative therapy focuses on the whole body experience and healing.

Those interested in learning more can visit the new Akesis Life website for more information on this integrative therapy, the location of the clinic and the doctors who have come together to introduce it to the medical world.

Source: <http://www.pressadvantage.com/story/22460-akesis-life-announces-launch-of-an-integrative-oncology-center-website>