People often think that what they don't know can't hurt them, but this saying is the complete opposite of reality here. When facing an impending Driving or DUI Charge, there are many ways in which mistakes can be made. Perhaps the most common fault is that breathalyzer tests are known to be faulty - and if those tests are not conducted in 15 minute intervals in a controlled manner, offenders will not know whether or not they really were over the limit. If drivers have any sort of stomach issue, acid reflux could alter the result. Needless to say, dental work and even mouthwash might also impact the reading - and not in the driver's favor. For those who chew tobacco, that too can alter the results. An experienced Drinking And Driving Lawyer Toronto will know how to deal with these types of issues.

If drivers have any sort of health problem, even one of which they are unaware, that too may create a false reading. For example, diabetics excrete excess ketones which the body converts into isopropyl alcohol which can be mistaken for alcohol drunk. Likewise, those following a strict diet may find the same type of body chemistry interfering with the breathalyzer tests.

Suspected impaired drivers may also undergo a physical coordination test before any further demand for an approved instrument check, a blood test or one for drug evaluation. Mistakes can be made due to the sheer number of tests being conducted, so checking these and challenging test is essential follow up.
