A Chicago Home Protection Pros spokesperson says, "We aren't scaring you when our experts give you home burglary statistics. In fact, the U.S. Bureau of Justice releases reports related to residential and commercial property burglaries every year. One scary figure you should remember: home theft occurs every 15 seconds. Leaving your home's security to chance shouldn't be part of your action plan. When it comes to securing your home from burglars, prevention is key. We are therefore happy to be able to expand our home security services in Chicago and nearby areas."

According to the spokesperson, there are three essential features of home security systems. These are home security alarms or burglar alarms, residential property marking, and home security cameras. Those who want to view their service area can take a look at their Google Maps page at <https://goo.gl/maps/Pkup6QHhdW52>.

While home alarm systems have long been used, they are still effective in driving away intruders near or inside the property. Many police officers believe that these alarms are the reason why 90 percent of home invasions are foiled robbery attempts. Furthermore, home alarm systems are now more affordable and can easily be purchased by homeowners.

Residential marking means "marking" all of the valuables with a certain "signature" that can easily indicate that they are owned by the homeowner. This includes putting window stickers, signage, a house number, post code, and more. Markings are also important for high value items, such as antiques. These markings can be such that they are only visible under ultraviolet light. This will allow police to easily identify stolen goods and robbers will find it more difficult to sell such items in the black market.

Home security cameras, which became popular as nanny cams, are effective for monitoring the home even when the homeowner is away. These security cameras send out images to a base station so that these can be viewed by television, smartphone, or computer. There are various kinds of home security cameras, from the traditional wired cameras to the wireless cameras, and the dummy cameras that are only designed to scare off would-be robbers.

The spokesperson warns that homeowners need to install a home security system as soon as possible or they might possibly regret it later. It is a common belief that while criminal activity may occur in other people's homes, it will not likely happen in their homes. However, that is not true. And when looking for a home security provider, there are a number of factors to consider. These include how long the company has been in service, whether their monitoring station operates 24 hours a day, whether support is available 24/7, whether the company's tracking centers' power supply is adequately backed up, the kinds of training that the crew went through, and the kinds of equipment that they have.

Home security companies will not just take care of complex security installations but they will also be able to handle the monitoring of the system 24/7 and report intruders to the local authorities in the event of security emergency situations. Costs will widely vary from a couple of hundreds to thousands of dollars, depending on how many cameras are required and how advanced the alarm system that the homeowner would like to install.
