Casey Ryebach from TNL Anaheim says, "The rise in living costs brought about by inflation, coupled with wages that are hardly increasing, is causing more people to experience a lack of funds, which in turn forces them to look for financial aid. What commonly occurs is that upon receiving their salaries, people often spend their money without thinking about future expenses. Too much spending is usually motivated by advertisements that encourage people to buy even those things that are not essential. This often results in a person's salary not being able to last until the next one. This is exacerbated further by the high cost of living in Anaheim and in other parts of California."

Indeed, the cost of living in California has been noted to be more than 60 percent higher than the United States average. Luckily, when residents of Anaheim ask the question, "where can I find loans near me?", they may find their answer in TNL Anaheim. Casey Ryebach states that they are ready and willing to lend a helping hand to people who are in need of financial assistance. Furthermore, they can really provide help because they don't even take into account the credit score of people who are looking for financial help. It is only in healthcare costs that residents of California can find some reprieve as healthcare costs are 7 percent lower compared to the average. Another major contributor to the high cost of living in California is transportation, which is 47 percent higher than the US average.
