The Duluth, Georgia based Atlanta Institute of Music and Media (AIMM) is pleased to announce that they have openings for students who wish to enroll in their Music Production and Audio for Media Degree Program. A long-time contributor to the music industry's growing pool of talented musicians and producers, AIMM is often described as the best Hip Hop music production school that anyone can attend.

As the school says, "Students who want to learn Music Production for Hip Hop and R&B will learn how to enhance and maintain their musical abilities through our Program. As time goes on, and as their talents flourish under our care, this will prepare them for what could be an incredibly fulfilling and prosperous career in the music industry of their choice." The real world reach of AIMM's educational programs cannot be understated. Just this year alone, for instance, AIMM graduate Kesha Lee earned a Grammy for Record of the Year for This is America with Childish Gambino. The music school offers hands-on immersive coursework in exclusive studios with industry-standard equipment.

Given the vast range of musical fields that are available, even within the relatively more narrow scope of Hip Hop and R&B, the school offers a similarly wide range of courses that carefully designed to nurture each student's latent abilities. As a bonus, AIMM's courses are led by professors who boast their own deep histories in the industry, lending students the opportunity to learn from those who have already experienced the careers and livelihood of artists in industries related to hip hop music production. This experience, it then follows, enables the next generation of audio engineers to graduate from AIMM having already come to grips with the demands and creative bounds of their future fields.

The Atlanta Institute of Music and Media Music Production Degree Program, “was designed with individuals in mind who wanted to produce their own hip hop music, songs, scores, and soundtracks,” says the school. “The program will take your passion for music and turn it into the professional production of music with the latest in digital music technology. Over the course of their training, students will cover a variety of topics that pertain to their future roles in the industry. These topics include Hip Hop Music Composition, Digital Music Production, Mixing and Mastering, Music Copyright and Publishing, and so on. Since the school recognizes that integration with the evolving music industry will require new graduates to be familiar with modern audio engineering tools and their various functions, they take measures to offer their students nothing but the best in state of the art equipment—the very same equipment that today’s professionals actively use to create the world’s top hits.

The professors at the Atlanta Institute of Music and Media, by virtue of necessity, are just as willing to update and fine tune their teaching methods to be more inclusive of modern standards. They employ a variety of innovative teaching methods to achieve this goal, such as live clinics hosted by professionals currently working in the industry, hands-on lab instruction, practical application instruction, and more.

According to the school, “Employing a variety of teaching styles within the classroom allows students to learn from traditional practices, hands-on experience, and real world scenarios from current industry front-runners. The Atlanta Institute of Music and Media offers programs in Hip Hop music production as well as related degrees like audio post and engineering.”

They add, “Atlanta is the hip hop headquarters of the world. Music and entertainment is not only in our blood, but Atlanta is also home to many of the most famous and successful hip hop music production studios and recording labels in the world.”
