

Meetpositives.com Releases Gay STD Statistics In The US

December 18, 2019

MeetPositives.com has been providing information about STDs and people living with lifelong infections. This is in addition to providing a dating platform where positive singles can find other singles looking for love, romance or companionship. The site gathers information from reliable sources such as the CDC and health organizations to keep users in the know about STDs and infection prevalence. Recently, the site has released information about gay people and STDs. The information is aimed at informing the LGBT community of STDs. The site offers gay dating services to people who are living with incurable STDs and would like to date without being judged.

According to the site, “Approximately 2% of the US population is made up of men who have sex with men. In 2010, a report indicated that bisexual and gay men between the ages of 13 and 24 accounted for 72% of new infections of HIV. More than 500,000 people living with HIV are gay. This means that if you are gay and living with an STD, you are not alone. You still have a shot at love and you can meet other singles that are looking for a relationship with other positive gay people.”
