

MeetPositives Functions As Gay Dating Website For STD Positive Partners

January 08, 2020

Online dating website for positive singles MeetPositives.com is pleased to announce that their platform is always ready to welcome LGBT users looking for new dating opportunities. Helmed by CEO Jack Lombardi, MeetPositives.com inhabits a unique niche in the world of online dating portals: their members are STD-positive individuals who are looking for people they can safely and comfortably have a relationship without ever needing to have difficult conversations about their STD status.

While the website primarily focuses on pairing singles with an STD-positive status, they recognize that LGBT singles may need more support and encouragement to get into the dating world. As such, MeetPositives.com asserts that they are willing to offer this support, and the website already has features that enable individuals across the spectrum of sexuality and gender identity to seek the relationships they desire.

As the website says, “The main goal of Meetpositives.com is to give positive LGBT singles a chance to date again. Dating is easier and more fun on this STD dating platform.” This is due to the fact that users are able to search for their ideal partner using certain parameters from the moment they sign up.

However, this is a common feature on many modern and progressive dating websites, so MeetPositives.com earns their place by taking it one step further. A search parameter can be set to seek out individuals who are living with a specific type of STD. In practice, this allows people who pose little to no additional risk of infection to find each other. Given that the website can also connect people of a certain sex, age range and who live in a given location, their members are more likely to meet people they will get along with than if they were to try interacting at random with people they meet.

“STD infections affect everyone regardless of their sexual orientation,” notes MeetPositives.com. “However, gays are at a greater risk of getting infected, especially when it comes to HIV. Statistics shows that HIV and syphilis infections among the LGBT community are on the rise, which is why it's important that they become educated on these facts. People with multiple sex partners and those who engage in sexual activity without protection are at the greatest risk.”

The gay dating website for STD positive partners continues that, “Approximately 2% of the US population is made up of men who have sex with men. In 2010, a report indicated that bisexual and gay men between the ages of 13 and 24 accounted for 72% of new infections of HIV. More than 500,000 people living with HIV are gay. This means that if you are gay and living with an STD, you are not alone. You still have a shot at love and you can meet other singles that are looking for a relationship with other positive gays.”

MeetPositives.com is determined to give positive individuals a chance to find love despite their condition, recognising that it is often inordinately difficult for people to reveal or otherwise discuss their STD status. Given that this difficulty is neatly sidestepped if both parties meet on a platform such as MeetPositives.com, positive singles should have a much easier time engaging with other people without wondering when they will have to bring up an uncomfortable conversation regarding their status.

“At MeetPositives.com, we are not only interested in helping you find love, but also making it last long-term,” says the website. “For this reason, we provide free advice and tips on building a strong relationship that will lead to happiness. We have created a community where you can share all of your concerns and information that you feel will help others. From this community, you will also get something in return. You will receive important details on handling your condition and living well with other positives.”

Positive singles who are interested in exploring the website’s dating capabilities further are welcome to sign up on MeetPositives.com today and begin interacting with other like-minded people. More information can be found elsewhere in the website’s resource pages, and interested parties may contact their support staff directly to follow up on any further inquiries.
