Tucson AZ: American Walk-In Coolers CEO and owner of American Walk-In Coolers, Gene Igou is pleased to announce the company has a commitment to manufacture only American-made products and to maintain the high level of quality in both the coolers and walk-in freezers units which they manufacture, deliver and install throughout the country. At a time when many manufacturing businesses have elected to move their facilities overseas, where labor prices and sometimes quality standards are lower, the Tucson-based firm has elected to provide American jobs and stick to American quality standards.

A number of independent testing laboratories have examined and certified the panels and other components as being in compliance of codes and certification standards. Underwriters Laboratory (UL) has tested and evaluated the panels and doors for features such as burning characteristics, smoke developed index, flame spread rating and electrical requirements. The units are in compliance with the National Sanitation Foundation's with NSF standard #7.

The State of Oregon, City of Los Angeles, City of New York, and the City of Houston Texas have certified the panels and insulated panels under various regulations and requirements. The coolers and freezers also meet or exceed federal requirements (EISA). These quality assurance for the products are combined with personal specialized assistance in each of the freezer and cooler units, as well as for the display coolers which feature glass doors.

Design and build support and installation assistance for new commercial applications, as well as other locations such as restaurants, convenience stores, and resorts, assures each customer savings in time and money. The coolers, freezers or combination units are a critical piece of equipment in the food industry. The purpose of a large cooler is to facilitate bulk perishable foods, while making the loading, unloading and locating of foods more convenient.

The additional benefit of 100 percent financing available to customers makes the quality of these refrigeration units, even more, helpful to customers.
